About

Founded in 1955, the National Association of Social Workers (NASW) is the largest organization dedicated to promoting, developing and protecting the practice of social work and professional social workers. NASW also seeks to enhance the effective functioning and well-being of individuals, families, and communities through its work and advocacy.

As the nation's largest group of mental health services providers, NASW members are trained professionals who have bachelors, masters, or doctoral degrees in social work. Members address problems as varied as substance abuse, family conflicts, workplace tensions, health problems, disabilities, mental illness, inadequate housing, poverty, and violence. They practice in a wide variety of settings (selectable) including: family services agencies, community mental health centers, child welfare, private practice, schools, hospitals, businesses, nursing homes, courts, prisons, and public and private agencies.

NASW members pay annual dues and respond to a wide array of offers. To better assist you in matching your product or service with the right social worker, NASW's member list is selectable by geography, function, practice, work setting, work focus, membership type, ethnicity, gender, age, income, and years experience in social work.
