About

Founded in 1897, the American Gastroenterological Association (AGA) represents physicians involved in all aspects of the science, practice and advancement of gastroenterology.

Members of AGA demonstrate to peers and patients an exceptional level of commitment to excellence in gastroenterological research, education and clinical practice. These professionals are physicians who specialize in treating digestive and liver disorders, as well as scientists who study the causes of digestive disease and the structure and function of the digestive system.

AGA members must stay current with a host of educational and medical products and services in order to deliver the highest quality of patient care, making them excellent prospects for a variety of offers.
